

Who Are These Guys? Glassopolis and Its Goals for Specialty Glass Distribution

The company made a big splash in the glass industry when it first released its spread in the July USGlass, but Glassopolis revealed little about itself beyond a yen for eye-catching advertising and a promise to provide fast quotes and delivery of specialty glass. Both counts raised a number of questions from members of the industry as to the background of this new distributor.

Glassopolis is, in fact, the new U.S. brand for specialty glass provider ProScience in Toronto, and was recently founded with the intention of easing the distribution process for glazing contractors working with fire-rated, lead x-ray, anti-reflective or other specialty glass products. ProScience, which is owned by a privately held investment group of individuals from the glass industry, operates and invests in glass products and technology companies. It is parent company to the likes of TecniGlas, ProScience Glass Shop, Designer Glass Co. and others. ProScience also has investments in nanotechnology, advanced polymers, building products, software, and commercial real estate.

Through market research, the new specialty glass distributor set out to identify a number of common problems glass contractors encounter when sourcing specialty glass. In response, Glassopolis reports that it has aimed to tailor its services to the needs of both contractors and manufacturers. For example, the company chose to use a central warehouse to eliminate the need for a middleman, cutting down on both cost and delivery time, and adopted flexible payment terms so contractors weren't forced to forego jobs because of credit issues. They also assembled a team of code experts equipped with the knowledge to provide fast, accurate responses to glazing contractors' questions. In addition, the company works with multiple manufacturers, so contractors have product options and are not squeezed by sole-source products.

"Most specialty glass comes from

Glassopolis got noticed fast with its catchy advertising.

manufacturers who are inherently product focused, not customer focused. Our role is to be completely customer service driven in the distribution of specialty glass," says Jordan Richards, president of Glassopolis. "Glazing contractors often have to jump through too many hoops to get the glass they need. We provide a one-stop specialty glass solution that not only provides contractors access to a wide selection of specialty glass products, but ultimately gives them the competitive edge through quick, knowledgeable service."

▶ www.glassopolis.com